Statement

Oregon state government provides a non-competitive method of rehiring experienced former state employees who separated from state service in good standing.

Applicability

Classified, management service, and unclassified service employees, excluding temporary employees.

Forms

- None

Definitions

Rehire: a non-competitive process to hire a qualified former state employee who left state service in good standing.

Also refer to State HR Policy 10.000.01, Definitions.

Policy

1. An appointing authority may rehire a former state employee, including limited duration employees, within two years from the separation date, if the employee left in good standing, voluntarily demoted, demoted in lieu of layoff, or reclassified downward in an agency in the same, equal or lower classification.
2. An appointing authority may rehire an unclassified service employee in a position for which qualified if the employee has been employed full time for at least 12 months consecutively in such service.
3. Rehire of an unclassified service employee shall occur only after any current classified represented employee has exhausted any right under an applicable collective bargaining agreement and after a current classified unrepresented or management service employee has exhausted layoff under applicable administrative rules or state HR policies.
4. In the event of a subsequent appointment to a classification with a lower salary range, rehire eligibility continues for the original classification from which the employee separated.
